

According to which natural law

two American farmers, one in '28, the other in '51 described the eye of a hurricane as a wall of clouds with spirals of fire attempting to break free from tiny tornados

sleep on your belly in bad weather avoid tents and trees no wind can ever be that cold and bluster without raining down fire seeds

walk westwards or sleep inside where thunderbolts cannot reach and lightning is laid to rest appears tamed – whirling or swirling wind also contains vertical components, bright spells!

the shrinking eye of a hurricane is still dangerous there's always the chance a chair will fall on your head.
